

FREE TASHI WANGCHUK

Tibetan shopkeeper Tashi Wangchuk was detained on January 27, 2016 after appearing in a New York Times video in which he advocated for the rights of Tibetans to learn and study in their mother tongue. Tashi had traveled to Beijing to appeal for the protection of Tibetan language rights within the framework of the Chinese constitution and legal system, and was met with a charge of “inciting separatism.” On May 22nd, 2018 he was convicted and is currently serving a five year term in prison.

Stand with Tashi Wangchuk

Take Action SFTHQ.cc/FreeTashi

FREE TASHI WANGCHUK

Tibetan shopkeeper Tashi Wangchuk was detained on January 27, 2016 after appearing in a New York Times video in which he advocated for the rights of Tibetans to learn and study in their mother tongue. Tashi had traveled to Beijing to appeal for the protection of Tibetan language rights within the framework of the Chinese constitution and legal system, and was met with a charge of “inciting separatism.” On May 22nd, 2018 he was convicted and is currently serving a five year term in prison.

Stand with Tashi Wangchuk

Take Action SFTHQ.cc/FreeTashi

